Surreal: Media pushes into Farook's apartment, rifles through everything there; Update: "I am so shocked, I cannot believe it"; Update: MSNBC apologizes

Uh, isn't this still a crime scene? The FBI says they've finished their work there, but...

In a phone call with Grasswire, a spokesperson for the FBI field office in Los Angeles confirmed the agency finished their investigation at the apartment on Thursday. But law enforcement officials at other agencies said the building was still an active crime scene.

"I don't know what's going on," Deputy Olivia Bozek, a spokesperson for the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department told Grasswire by phone. "That is not a cleared crime scene. There's still an active investigation going on."

The FBI's in charge of the investigation so if they say it's clear, presumably it's clear for all agencies. Let's hope: If the cops find out later that there were more than two people to this cell and they want to go back and look for the third suspect's fingerprints or DNA inside Farook's home, they can forget about that now. At last check at around 1:30 ET, not only were cameramen from various news outlets walking around inside, but seemingly random people off the street were too. One guy was caught on camera walking out with a popsicle. Supposedly Farook's landlord let the media in, but he's claiming that he didn't allow it and that they simply "rushed" in. (Another report claims that Inside Edition paid \$1,000 to get inside.)

Then there's this.

The “best-case” scenario is that the press is luridly publicizing sensitive information, including presumably innocent people’s personal data, for no better reason than that it’s lying around at a major crime scene. The worst-case scenario is that they're handling actual evidence there. For instance, what if Farook's wife was using his mother's driver's license as fake ID? The cops will need that later. This is what makes it hard to understand how the FBI could have cleared the scene. Wouldn't they want all papers, identifying documents, credit card statements, etc, inside the apartment? They can't possibly know all the information they might need for the investigation after 36 hours. They left this stuff behind presumably because it's of no use to them now but with the understanding that it'd still be there for them later if they needed to look again.

Here's video via the Free Beacon. Stand by for freaky deaky updates, as this can only end with reporters ordering a pizza from Farook's living room.

Update: A friend on Twitter notes that some documents might have been left behind simply because they're beyond the scope of the first search warrant. Right, but what about the second or third as the investigation develops?

Update: Here's Harnden again: "The house was stuffed full of documents, notebooks, photos, business cards, IDs – incredible trove." Ace's co-blogger Drew McCoy makes a good point too. How likely is it that a judge would have authorized only a very narrow warrant after a major terror attack? Obviously the warrant would be broad to help the cops piece together exactly what happened.

Free speech is a deadly weapon. We should regulate it to keep out of the hands of people who don't know how to use it, no?

Update: Maybe the FBI can buy back any important evidence once it goes on sale on eBay.

Update: I believe Gabe Malor's right about this. Typically, state laws don't allow landlords to enter a tenant's apartment without the tenant's permission or until the lease is up. Unless the lease says otherwise, i.e. that the landlord may immediately reenter upon the tenant's death, it's not clear that he had the right to open the apartment up to the public. At least without the permission of Farook's next of kin.

Update: A superb point from Sean Davis. Only within the past hour or so has the FBI formally announced that it's treating the San Bernardino shooting as terrorism. How could they have possibly cleared the crime scene when they didn't even have a theory of the crime yet? They wouldn't have known exactly what sort of evidence to look for.

Update: A half-apology from MSNBC. They're not sorry for being there. They're not sorry for having possibly contaminated or destroyed evidence. But as for showing innocent people's IDs on TV, well...

"MSNBC and other news organizations were invited into the home by the landlord after law enforcement officials had finished examining the site and returned control to the landlord. Although MSNBC was not the first crew to enter the home, we did have the first live shots from inside. We regret that we briefly showed images of photographs and identification cards that should not have been aired without review," a statement from a network spokesperson read.

If this attack had been carried out on a mosque, and the perpetrators were white, Christian, NRA members, does ANYONE believe that Barry's FBI would have released their house so quickly? Just goes to show that Barry's “fundamental transformation” is almost complete.

We are no longer a Constitutional Republic, we are now a Banana Republic. All that is left to complete in his last year is to deal with those pesky first and second amendments by making “hate speech” a crime (see “Loretta Lynch: We will prosecute hateful rhetoric about Muslims that “edges towards violence”) and by “sensible gun laws”.

The good news is that, ultimately, no matter how hard they try they will be unable to completely black out

The bad news is Islamist Terrorists are running unchecked in the country and they WILL attack us.

There are two legal entities which have authority over access to that apartment.

1. A baby at Grandma's house. (Obviously, a guardian ad litem will stand in)

The landlord has no right to enter that apartment whatsoever. Everyone who entered should be arrested for breaking and entering, burglary, and vandalism.

Interesting theory posted at the treehouse that the FBI may have allowed this ransacking in order to stir up "concern chatter" among the other members of the Syed/Tashfeen cell in order to identify them.

There's a 3-hour unaccounted for window between the massacre at the Inland Regional Center and the SUV chase that ended in the deaths of Syed and Tashfeen. Time for them to have handed off those Go-Pros with the Christmas massacre footage to as yet unknown confederates.

Although survivors of the Center shooting reported that Sayed and/or Tashfeen were wearing a Go-Pro camera, the GO-PRO(S) HAVEN'T BEEN FOUND. They were not found with the perps or in the SUV, or at least the police statement that listed what was found at the final shootout site does not include a camera. Was there one? The LA Times has reported that among the random items removed from the apartment was packaging for a Go-Pro camera.

The theory is that the FBI and police have let it be known that they know the camera is out there, in the hopes that whoever is currently lying low with the invaluable ISIS propaganda footage that it contains will be goaded into acting sooner rather than later, i.e., attempt to leave the country where the footage can be edited and uploaded without exposing the local cell. The article also includes some fascinating information on the drone surveillance of the likely cell area that's been on-going since the shooting.

This posting this for informational purposes. The whole apartment invasion by the media has been bizarre and inexplicable except for the most sinister and cynical of explanations. And those may well be correct. But here's an alternative theory.

Typically, on search warrants documents related to the identity of the suspects and evidence of occupation and travel is included. Its boiler plate stuff. "Venue" items are also typically listed. Leaving documents in this manner is VERY surprising. Even if you are not going to use it you grab as many items as you can with the understanding these items could play a role in the investigation down the road. A passport???? My god. Documents such as these are within the scope of virtually any crime. If the search warrant did not include these items the FBI needs to get some new investigators or turn to the locals who do search warrants weekly.

So the picture of the one lying in the road with what looks like shorts on is the female terrorist? Strange if that is true because by all accounts she never went in public without a burka. I'm not saying she should have had a burka on, but shorts doesn't seem very modest for a conservative muslim women.

Um...Are they all out of that yellow plastic 'CRIME SCENE: DO NOT ENTER' tape at the San Bernardino WalMart?
Or at the California FBI office?

I had a rental property of mine raided by the DEA, courtesy of a scumbag renter who turned out to be wholesaling drugs (decided that rental properties were not my thing, after that). I couldn't touch a THING for days afterwards, in case they wanted to come back and turn everything upside down a second time. Or a third. And this was just a plain old, run-of-the-mill drug investigation. And here you have Mohammed bin-Lunatic and his wife kill more than a dozen people, and the FBI just leaves IDs and so forth in situ? Really?

I believe they have to be gone without notice for two weeks in California before you can throw open their apartment, but it's been so long I may misremember or the law could have changed.

Chuck Todd was on Hugh Hewitt tonight. He said he was “stunned” and “dumbfounded” on what he saw. And will ask AG Lynch as MTP guest this Sunday about “the slopiness” of the crime scene security.

aquaviva on December 5, 2015 at 12:34 AM

I think someone hinted earlier that maybe the FBI did this on purpose. By having the media come in and photograph and film everything, it will make it harder for the DOJ and company to make evidence “disappear”. Especially given the apparent riff between the FBI and the DOJ.

Tinker on December 4, 2015 at 5:52 PM

That cuts both ways, though. It would also demonstrate sloppy handling of the evidence, bring up chain of evidence questions and the issue of having a contaminated crime scene. i.e. the evidence can be suppressed or ruled inadmissible.

whatcat on December 4, 2015 at 6:11 PM

TFHS going wild on this one — because all of the crazy ideas, for this administration, sound plausible.

Typically, on search warrants documents related to the identity of the suspects and evidence of occupation and travel is included. Its boiler plate stuff. “Venue” items are also typically listed. Leaving documents in this manner is VERY surprising. Even if you are not going to use it you grab as many items as you can with the understanding these items could play a role in the investigation down the road. A passport???? My god. Documents such as these are within the scope of virtually any crime. If the search warrant did not include these items the FBI needs to get some new investigators or turn to the locals who do search warrants weekly.

Inzax on December 4, 2015 at 7:31 PM

Of course, the sinister/cynical explanation of the missing Go-Pro(s) would be that the FBI/police have, in fact, recovered the camera(s) but are under explicit orders from We All Know Who to conceal this fact, and to suppress whatever footage there might exist of the massacre, in order to... well, subscribers to the sinister/cynical theories will have no trouble enumerating the reasons to conceal video evidence of the attack.

We have been so conditioned by the crime shows on TV to expect professional excellence, that these examples of incompetence are stunning.

I am reminded of the suicide-killing at the Iraq or Afghan base where the perp — a supposed double-agent — massacred several high-level CIA officials and agents because they didn't want to disrespect him by frisking him before letting him come in to the meeting.

Anyone who watches movies or reads Tom Clancy knows better than that!

Our loyal, liberal, progressive and BIASED media is exempt from prosecution as they are Friends of Obama and exempt as long as they send filtered news down the pipeline on command from Obama and CAIR in the White House.

Obamatrix on December 5, 2015 at 12:35 PM

"I believe Gabe Malor's right about this. Typically, state laws don't allow landlords to enter a tenant's apartment without the tenant's permission or until the lease is up. Unless the lease says otherwise, i.e. that the landlord may immediately reenter upon the tenant's death, it's not clear that he had the right to open the apartment up to the public. At least without the permission of Farook's next of kin."

It gets a little weirder. Because there were explosive materials involved that means that no court order would have been needed. The ownership of the property shifts to the "chief" emergency services officer. (For those not aware, this is how Firefighting works. The Chief assumes ownership of the property in order to fight the fire because there is a clear threat. That ownership does not return to the actual deed holder until conditions are met and the situation is secured to the Chief or Fire Officials satisfaction. This is why you can't sue the Fire Department for Property Damages. Bomb stuff works the same way.)

So no the FBI could not have released that crime scene because it was not theirs to release. That happens at the local level. The FBI can say they are done with it, at which point the local authorities release it.

Of course it also begs the question how or why the home of two murderous terrorists was left without some sort of uniformed police oversight? Why was a patrol car not parked outside?

This is Rachel Maddow, reporting live from the San Bernardino County home of Syed Farook and Tashfeen Malik.

I was among the first welcomed inside the dwelling after I helped kick down the front door.

While rummaging through the couple's personal affects, I found incontrovertible evidence linking Farook and Malik to fanatical right-wing Christian militia death squads and, more specifically, conservative talk radio.

I am holding here a grocery shopping list written by Farook. Within this list are the letters "L," "I," "M," and "B." Although these four letters are not adjacent one another and are intermixed with about 500 other characters, it is an ominous fact that these four letters are on the same grocery list.

I also discovered Malik's private diary. On one page I found the letters "A", "U," and "G."

Lastly, I happened upon a reference book. In the index there appears the letter "H."

I have connected the dots by putting all these letters together. They spell the name of the talk-radio mastermind behind the tragedy of San Bernardino County.

With this discovery, it is now beyond debate that the greatest danger to America is white people who worship Jesus and are all into the Crusades and stuff. It is up to responsible members of the press, like myself and my media colleagues here in San Bernardino County, to expose this danger and goad the government into taking immediate action and end this epidemic of conservative lunacy.
